TELLING STORIES

I know of a boy that's sleepy.

I can tell it by the nodding head
And the eyes that cannot stay open
While the good alight prayer is said.
And the whispered "Tell a 'tory,"
Said in such a drowsy way,
Makes me hear the bells of Dreamlan
That ring at close of day.

So you want a story, darling!
What shall the story be?
Of Little Boy Blue in the haystack
And the sheep he fails to see
As they nibble the meadow clover
While the cows are in the corn?
Oh, Little Boy Blue, wake up,
For the farmer blows his horn.

Or shall it be the story
Of Little Bopeep I tell
And the sheep he lost and meurned for
As if awful fate befell?
But there was no need of sorrow.
For the pet that went astray,
Since, left alone, he came back home
In his own good time and way.

Oh, the pigs that went to market!
That's the tale for me to tell.
The great big pig and the little pigs.
And the wee, wee pig as well.
Here's the big pig—what a beauty!
But not half as counting is he
As this little tot of a baby pig
That can only say "Wee wee!"

Just look at the baby, bless him!

Just look at the baby, bless him!
The little regime's fast asleep.
I might have stopped telling stories
When I got to lattle Bopeep.
Oh, little one, how I love you!
You are so dear, so fair!
Here's a good night kies, my baby.
God have you in his care!

THAT STOUT MAN.

In the city of Brussels a great deal of very pretty lace is exposed for sale. English women admire this lace and buy it. If they go straight from Belginm to England, they can take it home without having to pay any duty, but if they pass through France they have to pay on all their new Brussels lace at the French custom house. And many English women pass through France on their way from Belgium to England, because they prefer the short passage from Calais to Dover to the longer one

The Misses Wylie were charming, middle aged ladies, fond of travel, fond of dress, fond of lace and very bad sailors. They had been excursioning in Germany, had come down the Rhine and had spent a week in Brussels. More attractive than the field of Waterloo and more fascinating than the Musee Wiertz was the Galerie St. Hubert. Miss Melissa Wylie could not resist the white Brussels lace; Miss Annora Wy-lie could not resist the black. Each of the ladies bought; led on by the tempter, in the shape of a seductive shop wom-an, the Misses Wylie bought lace fichus, lace collarettes, lace by the meter. Day by day they added to their stock. At length it was necessary to make for England and to pass through that dreadful France with its protective duties. Then they realized their position. How about the lace?

remarked Miss Melissa, "that we have rien a declarer (nothing to declare) because this lace is dutiable."

"And we dare not risk packing it," returned Miss Annora, "because they might take it into their heads to examsuppositions broke off rapidly.

Annora looked at Melissa, and Melissa it! We will wear it! No duty is paid on what one is wearing."
"Yes, yes," said Melissa, "but how

Then he discoursed on the country through which they were passing, after which he buried himself in a Figaro and talked no more. They set to work to decorate their bonnets with the lace. They mingled white and black, fichu and flounce, in At the next stoppage he said a brusque "Good morning, ladies," and left the compartment, and they saw no more of the most skillful manner, and though the bonnets looked somewhat overdone, yet they carried the lace, and it was

The Misses Wylie rejoiced in their cleverness. They sat in the train on their way to France with clear con-sciences and light hearts. They had rien a declarer—nothing dutiable. day after their home coming they received by the same post a parcel and a letter. Annora opened the carefully tied and scaled parcel, while Melissa read the letter. Having read it once to herself, she next read it aloud to her sister:

MESDARES—I felt myself under a very great obligation to you the other day at Blandain. I am a very thin man, but I was swathed round with hundreds of yards of fine Brussels lace, and I thought that the best way of drawing the attention of the custom house officers from myself was to draw it to you. It was purely in self defense that I directed the raid on your honnets. Having been the cause of the loss of your lace, I wish to make you due compensation, and I beg leave to sent you some finer lace than that which you lost. I am obsdiently yours, Your Stour Frillow Travellik.

Discouraged but not disheartened, Westinghouse left, only later to bring the great invention to the knowledge of the Pennslyvania Bailroad authorities. At that time Tom Scott was the President of the corporation, and he at once saw the practicability of the in-vention and allowed some of his cars to be equipped with it. With that opening it was easy enough to get other roads to use the brake, and Westinghouse's fame and fortune were made. When that time had arrived he one day received a letter from Commodore Vanderbilt asking him to call at the Central's office. Mr. Westinghouse's reply was terse and to the point. He simply wrote:
